

Mission Statement

I don't have my mission statement from TEM. I don't remember what I had word for word but this is pretty close.

It is my mission to graduate with a bachelor's degree and have my own freelance business in the next 3 years. With focus, flexibility, and a proactive approach I will accomplish these goals. Focusing on my goals and the steps needed to reach them will help me stay on the right path and not stray. Being flexible will prepare me for any obstacles that come my way and will allow me to adapt to any situation so I can keep moving forward. Being proactive will keep me a step ahead, allowing me to be prepared for what I have in front of me as well as complimenting my flexibility. With focus, flexibility, and a proactive approach I will succeed at reaching my goals of finishing school and starting my own business.

I don't see anything that would have changed since I had TEM back in November. My mission has been pretty much the same since I started at Full Sail. In fact, its been almost the same since I started at my previous college in 2012 with the exception of where my focus was. There I was going for a business degree which I felt was too broad of a subject to help me achieve my ultimate goal of being able to work for myself. I have since learned that focusing on one subject, like web design and development, will give me the best opportunity to get to where I want to be. So far what I have learned hasn't changed my goals.

Right now, on my journey, I am just getting started. I am building my foundation for what I hope will be a successful business. As I learn more at Full Sail I will add to what I can offer in a business. At this point I am working on my own personal brand website and one that will become my actual business. Every class I take adds another brick to the foundation so that when I graduate I will be where I want to be with my career.
